TREND PREMIUM LAMINATES

The current invention relates to a flexible laminate of films made of thermoplastic polymer material for applications requiring relatively high yield strength and ultimate tensile strength, as well as a method and apparatus for producing it. Tarpaulins, pond liners, geotextile substitutes, weather-protecting laminates, greenhouse film, industrial bags, carrier bags, and self-standing pouches are examples of such technologies.

For economic reasons, there is a growing demand to reduce the thickness or square metre weight of the thermoplastic polymer-based flexible film. The limits are determined in part by the needed strength qualities, and in part by the required self-supporting capabilities, i.e. stiffness with regard to banding.

These requirements have primarily been addressed by selected advancements of thermoplastic polymer compositions, as well as, in terms of strength, by biaxial orientation or cross-lamination of films, each of which exhibits a generally monaxial or imbalanced biaxial orientation. Such orientation and cross laminations 25 procedures can result in significant strength savings.

ROBERT GAIR

Robert GairIn 1890, Robert Gair pioneered the pre-cut paperboard box – flat pieces manufactured in bulk that folded into boxes. Gair's invention happened by chance. During the 1870s, he worked as a Brooklyn printer and paper bag maker. A metal ruler used to crease the seed bags shifted in position and cut them while he was printing them. Gair realized that by cutting and creasing in the same operation, he could create prefabricated paperboard boxes. When corrugated boxboard became accessible in the early twentieth century, it was a simple matter to apply this concept to it. Fluted laminates were also discovered on the concept of corrugated fibreboards
